Commuter Revolution

A Seismic Approach to Transforming Transportation

Thursday, May 21 | 11:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m. CST

Massive changes to our transportation system were long overdue. With commuting routines upended and our economy in shambles we are forced to reckon with long-needed improvements to land use and infrastructure. Tune in to this free webinar as Move Minneapolis presents an amazing line-up of national thought leaders and local activists, each with a compelling take on how to build an equitable and sustainable post-pandemic transportation system.

Featured Webinar Speakers

Matthew Lewis | Director of Communications, California YIMBY

After a ten-year career as a broadcast and print journalist, Matthew moved into advocacy communications with a focus on environmental justice, energy policy, and climate change. He is currently Director of Communications for California YIMBY and believes that there is plenty of room on his block for more neighbors.

Michael Kodransky | U.S. Director, Institute for Transportation and Development Policy

Michael leads the ITDP US program, assuring that global best practices inform sustainable transport and urban development in North America. Michael brings together programs that span diverse teams, stakeholders, geographic areas, and time zones. In the next decade, he wants to break the virtuous cycle of car use in US society.

Angie Schmitt | Author and former contributor, Streetsblog

Angie Schmitt is one of the country's best-known writers on the topic of sustainable transportation. She was the long-time national editor at Streetsblog. Her book, Right of Way, about the pedestrian safety crisis in America, will be published in August by Island Press.

Adie Tomer | Fellow, Metropolitan Policy Program, The Brookings Institution

Adie Tomer looks at numbers and creates stories. He leads the Infrastructure and Built Environment portfolio at the Brookings Institution where he focuses on patterns in metropolitan infrastructure and the intersections between infrastructure and technological development. He is a noted expert on driving trends and transit accessibility. His work has been covered in The Economist, The Wall Street Journal, and The New York Times.

Jarred Johnson | Director and COO, TransitMatters

Jarred Johnson has worked in affordable housing development and transit organizing. As the Chief Operating Officer for Boston-based TransitMatters, Jarred combines those skills as he advocates for post-pandemic resiliency at the neighborhood level, seeking to assure access to jobs, walkability, and green forms of transportation to raise communities out of poverty and poor health outcomes.

Alissa Walker | Urbanism Editor, Curbed

Alissa Walker connects people with where they live through writing, speaking, and walking. As the urbanism editor at Curbed, she authors the column Word on the Street, highlighting the pioneering transit, clever civic design, and game-changing policy affecting our cities. Alissa lives in Los Angeles, where she is a co-host of LA Podcast, a weekly podcast covering news, policies, and major issues facing Los Angeles.
